Net Investment Income Growth is a metric that measures net investment income growth. The growth metric takes into account the amount of capital being invested in net investment income for the quarter, which is measured by the amount of cash, securities, and derivative flows that are included in net investment income for the quarter. For example, if a company invests the same amount of cash, securities, and derivative flows in one quarter at 3 percent, and then spends the same amount of money to reinvest in new growth in another, the average amount of net investment income growth is 1.75 percent for the quarter, with a cumulative negative growth for the quarter which would be $0.24/share of Q4 2016 as compared to a growth of 2.6 percent in Q3 2016.. Is there a Good Reason to Raise Our May 2016 Net Investment Income Estimate? Yes. Net Investment income growth is generally a good metric at measuring economic performance that is largely driven by the market and the economy as a whole. The net investment income growth measure can also be used to show changes in the business cycle such as a more favorable currency exchange rate (FXR), lower retail sales (RSD), or less new business (NTB). To achieve the higher growth rate, the Q4 2016 analysis was done through two different methods. For each time interval, they were applied to two different time periods:..
